

ENSPT 2007

Dear Mr. Ekpang,

My father mentioned you in his last letter to me and said that you be pleased to hear from me. How are you and your family?

Has Kekong recovered from the minor accident with his bicycle?

This term's work is quite enjoyable, although the term began with a student demonstration about the poor food we are served here. At breakfast time on Tuesday morning, one of my classmates said he could detect the smell of kerosene in his food. Within a few minutes news that the cooks had served us kerosene with our food had spread throughout the refectory. Very soon plates began to fly in the air and some through windows were heard breaking. It took the entire staff to calm everyone down. The students got a firm promise from the principal that he would see to it that the quality of the food improved. The meals are still awful though there has been a slight improvement.

I came fifth in the class test we had in English, and our teacher read out my essay to the rest of the class. I felt quite proud. Dad has assured me that if I maintain my present standard or improved on it, he will get me a present during the holidays.

One thing my father did not mention to me in his letter was his health. Do you know how well he is recovering from the operation for a hernia? Is he able to walk again normally? I wonder if I ought to come home early to help him and mother, though I know it would interrupt my studies. I'm sure you are the best person to advice me on this, because I think my father would say "no, don't come", even if he needed me.

The harmattan is slowly settling in now and my lips are beginning to get very dry. Give my love to Kekong and write to me soon.

Yours Sincerely, Out Bedia
